

2021 Genealogy Series

Welcome!

The National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) is pleased to present this educational series of lectures on how to do family research.

As one of the nation's premier genealogy institutions, it is our mission to inform the public about the National Archives' holdings that relate to family history and to make those holdings available.

The screenshot shows a YouTube live event interface. At the top, it says "Join the conversation!" and "Participate during the live event." Below this, it instructs users to "Log in to YouTube, and then type your questions and comments into the live chat." The video player shows a video titled "Migrant Farm Workers and the Evolution of Farm Labor Programs in the United States (2021 Feb 10)" with 1,605 views. Below the video player, there is a handout section with a red dashed circle around it. The handout text reads: "US National Archives 26.7K subscribers 'Migrant Farm Workers and the Evolution of Farm Labor Programs in the United States' Gabrielle Hutchins, Ph.D. an archivist at the National Archives at College Park, MD, shares federal records documenting migrant farm workers' participation in U.S. farm labor programs. By SHOW MORE". To the right of the video player, there is a chat window with a red dashed circle around it. The chat window shows a list of messages, including a welcome message from the US National Archives and a message from Gabrielle Hutchins. A red arrow points from the chat window to the text "Chat - log in to participate and ask questions".

The National Archives Building in Washington, DC contains many records about noncombatant civilians connected with the Union Army during the American Civil War. However, the records are underutilized because there is no comprehensive index, no “one” place to look, and require time-consuming research into obscure records. Digitization is slowly changing that, however! This lecture will provide suggestions for research with emphasis on online materials that can help you get started.

Wagonmasters Serving the Union During the Civil War

By Claire Prechtel-Kluskens, J.D. \(See Footnote*\)

Reproduced with permission from the National Genealogical Society ↗ Quarterly, Vol. 85, No. 4 (Dec. 1997): 295-311.

Updated February 5, 2000.

Documenting civilian service during wartime can pose daunting challenges. A family's oral traditions may not include information about nonmilitary service. Even when a civilian role is recalled or referenced in a local history, finding documentary evidence may be difficult and tedious. Federal personnel records for civilians of the nineteenth century, for example, are fragmented--arranged by agency, thereunder by major subdivision of the agency, thereunder by time period, and thereunder in whatever manner each agency kept its records. \(See Footnote 1\) Time periods vary, as do the types of surviving records. \(See Footnote 2\) Once located, these records seldom yield family information, but they do provide details of one aspect of an individual's life. \(See Footnote 3\) Wagonmaster Records This article reproduces a list of civilian wagonmasters who served the Union during the Civil War. The data come from 101 typewritten, three-by-five-inch cards created by the Office of the Quartermaster General and maintained by the National Archives and Records Administration [NARA], Washington, D.C. \(See Footnote 4\) The date of preparation is unknown, but the file probably originated in the first two decades of the twentieth century, at which time the federal government (and particularly the military establishment) slowly converted from manuscript to typewritten material. \(See Footnote 5\) Although NARA's

Research Tips Of all the above series, Series 238, Reports of Persons and Articles Hired, 1818-1905, is the mother lode of documentation for civilian quartermaster employees. This would be a natural starting point for further research, after first consulting its index in Series 228. For wagonmasters employed in 1861 (who do not appear in the card list transcribed for this article) supplemental help might appear in Entry 240, Record of Personal Services, 1861. As the search proceeds, information on the commanding officer's career might be found in several places-- particularly his compiled military service record (RG 94, Records of the Adjutant General's Office) and possible pension file (RG 15, Records of the Veterans Administration), as well as, perhaps, other record series in RG 94. Any of this material might be useful for pinning down the date span during which the officer was stationed at a particular place and, by extension, delimiting the time period during which the civilian wagonmaster could have been employed at that station by that officer. In general, it is often possible to document an ancestor's civilian service during wartime, although particular cases may prove difficult. As with all genealogical research, the essentials for success are patience, persistence, imagination, and a good understanding of available records.

Other People — Provost Marshal Personnel

The entry for June 27, 1863, mentions receiving information from U.S. Marshal Carr that Moses Merrit Greenwood of New Orleans, Louisiana, "was suspected of being a spy." (Page 19). The entry for October 30, 1863, discusses Elam Church, who was newly arrested as a reported deserter from Company G, 1st Connecticut Artillery Regiment. He had enlisted in March 1862, but was discharged from military service in April 1862 because he had enlisted at age 16 without his father's consent. The father provided evidence of these facts and the young man was released from custody. (Page 27).

October 30th 1863. There was arrested and brought to this office to day, one Elam Church, reported to be a deserter from Co. G 1st Conn Artillery.
This young man enlisted at Olive St. Mendigos
New Haven in March 1862. On the 2^d
April 1862 he was brought before Judge Parke of the Superior Court on writ of Habeas Corpus, and proof being furnished that he was under fifteen years of age & enlisted without his father's consent, he was discharged from the U.S. Service. Proof of these facts was given me by his father, and the young man was released from further custody.
