INTRODUCTION

This reference paper describes the records held by the National Archives at New York City pertaining to Federal government activity in Puerto Rico. These records span 28 different record groups and comprise a total of over 2,750 cubic feet, including six microfilm publications. The majority of documents are in English, however some record groups contain a significant portion of material in Spanish. Furthermore, due to a mistranslation in the Treaty of Paris, the island was commonly referred to as “Porto Rico” in U.S. documents until this practice was formally changed by an act of Congress in 1932. Links are provided to the relevant Archival Research Catalogue (ARC) entry, when available.

Following rising tensions between the United States and Spain centered on an ongoing Cuban revolt against Spanish rule, the U.S declared war against Spain on April 25, 1898. Three months later the U.S. warship Gloucester entered the harbor of Guánica in southwest Puerto Rico and began landing troops. On July 28, 1898, American troops occupied the city of Ponce, and after 19 days of fighting in Puerto Rico, hostilities were halted on August 12, 1898 following agreement to a peace protocol between the two nations. The city of San Juan was turned over to American military authorities on October 18, 1898 and that day General John R. Brooke cabled President McKinley informing him that the occupation of the island was complete. However, it was not until December that the Treaty of Paris was signed formally ending the war. Under the terms of Article IX of the Treaty of Paris, Congress would determine the civil rights and political status of the people of Puerto Rico. Thus began the U.S. Federal government’s involvement in the lives of the Puerto Rican people.

On April 12, 1900, the first Organic Act, commonly known as the Foraker Act, entered into force establishing the parameters of a civilian government and the general Federal relationship with the island’s inhabitants. A series of Supreme Court decisions the following year, collectively referred to as the Insular Cases, established that the policy of non-incorporation was constitutional and that full constitutional rights did not automatically extend to all areas under American control. The relationship of the Federal government to Puerto Rico was further refined by the terms of the 1917 Organic Act, also known as the Jones Act, and ultimately by the terms of Public Law 600 in 1950 which led to the adoption of the Puerto Rican Constitution and establishment of the current Commonwealth relationship.

The records held by the National Archives in New York City related to Puerto Rico span the full spectrum of government activities: from census rolls to court cases, from military installations to economic development projects. The materials document the history of the Federal government’s often complicated relationship with Puerto Rico and reveal its reach within the Puerto Rican community on the island. By documenting Federal activities over the course of Puerto Rican history for more than a hundred years, these materials provide important insight into the collective understanding of both Puerto Rican society and the larger American experience.

RG 29 Nonpopulation Census Schedules for Puerto Rico, 1930: Nonfarm Livestock

The 1930 nonfarm livestock census of Puerto Rico is a microfilm publication (M1896) consisting of two rolls of film. These records consist of Form 15-60, Tabla Para Ganado Fuera de Fincas—Puerto Rico, which measures about 8.25 by 11 inches, with space for 28 proprietors of livestock on each side. This schedule was used to report all livestock kept in “stables, ranches, corrals, horse stables, courtyards,” (“establos, ranchos, corrales, caballerizas, patios”) and other places near cities and towns too small to be considered farms. For census purposes, a “farm” was a tract of land larger than three acres or, if less than three acres, a place that either produced more than $100 worth of agricultural products in 1929 or required the continuous services of at least one person. The schedules are arranged alphabetically by municipality, then by a mechanically stamped number. Within each municipality the schedules are usually, but not always, arranged in numerical order by enumeration district.

Each person was to report the number of livestock in his possession on April 1, 1930. The records include name of possessor or owner for the following types of animals: cattle, horses, mules, asses and donkeys, swine, sheep, goats, and bee colonies.

RG 21 District Courts of the United States, 1897-1995
RG 578 U.S. Bankruptcy Courts, 1970-1979
(1,581.029 cubic feet)

The Provisional United States Court was established on June 27, 1899 by the military government pursuant to General Order No. 88. The jurisdiction of the provisional court included cases that would normally fall with the competency of U.S. Circuit or District Courts, violations of the Constitution, and all common law violations. The Provisional Court was in existence until the civil government for the island was formed in 1900 by Act of Congress. Section 33 of the Organic Act of April 12, 1900 [31 Stat. 77], also known as the Foraker Act, established a United States District Court for Puerto Rico. On January 28, 1915, Congress authorized the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit to hear appeals from the District Court in Puerto Rico, which until that time had been heard directly by the Supreme Court. The District Court was further defined by the Jones Act of 1917 [39 Stat. 965].

Judges appointed to the District of Puerto Rico before September 12, 1966, were "Article I" judges since they were appointed for a specific term of four years, until 1932 when the term of office was extended to eight years. Article I judges are so-called because they are appointed to courts created by Congress (legislative courts), pursuant to the powers granted to the Congress by Article I of the United States Constitution. On September 12, 1966, Congress enacted a law [80 Stat. 764] which provided that all future appointments to the U.S. District Court for the District of Puerto Rico would hold office "during good behavior," establishing the district court as a Constitutional Court pursuant to Article III of the Constitution.

Researchers should also consider the jurisdictional boundaries of the district courts, as cases involving Puerto Rico may have been heard outside the District of Puerto Rico. For example, the case United States v. Augustus Gramin was heard in the U.S Court for the Southern District of New York and involved a murder off the coast of Puerto Rico.

The records document the actions of the Federal district court, which has jurisdiction over naturalization, bankruptcy, civil (law, equity, and admiralty), and criminal cases. General topics covered may include civil rights, commerce and corporate history, demographics, immigration, the impact of Federal regulatory programs, judicial administration, labor relations and union activity, maritime history, and nationalist political activity. Specific topics covered may include collection of debts, enforcement of contracts, claims for damages, counterfeiting, evasion of import duties, smuggling or violations of customs regulations, the illegal sale or manufacturing of alcoholic beverage, infringement of patent or copyright, interstate transfer of stolen property, theft, assault, or murder on Federal property, and other violations of Federal laws.

Records are primarily case files - papers in a specific case filed by attorneys or issued by the court, such as affidavits, complaints, depositions, indictments, judgments or final decrees, motions, petitions, subpoenas, and writs. Bankruptcy case files also contain petitions of creditors and schedules of assets and liabilities. Case files are arranged numerically by the docket number assigned when the case was filed. Documentary exhibits submitted as part of court proceedings usually were returned to the parties involved, but they are sometimes included in the case file. Transcripts are seldom part of the file.

There are also docket books - a summary of proceedings in each case, including a brief abstract of motions and orders, a record of the fees collected, and a statement of the disposition of the case; minute books or journals - a daily chronological record of court proceedings, often including information about financial accounts and the collection of fees, affidavits and exhibits, names of attorneys admitted to practice, and the text of orders appointing court officials; order or judgment books - the text of each order or judgment and a record of the amount of any monetary judgment; record of proceedings for U.S. commissioners and magistrates that deal with lesser criminal offenses – a printed form that gives the name of the defendant, and summaries of the nature of the charge, the actions taken, and the disposition of the case.

Naturalization papers include declarations of intention, petitions for naturalization, and depositions, as well as a limited number of case files. Petitions for naturalization filed in the District Court in Puerto Rico often include supplemental documents such as birth certificates or affidavits. Repatriation oaths of allegiance, in general, were filed by women who lost their U.S. citizenship through marrying an alien prior to 1922 when women derived their status from their husband. There are two series of naturalization records that are unique to Puerto Rico. Under the terms of the Treaty of Paris ending the Spanish-American War, “Spanish subjects, natives of the Peninsula” could retain their citizenship by submitting a declaration to that effect. Native born inhabitants of Puerto Rico were not afforded this option. Section 5 of the Jones Act of 1917 conferred American citizenship on individuals born in Puerto Rican. Under the terms of this section, any person born in Puerto Rico of alien parentage, including whose parents retained Spanish citizenship, could acquire U.S. citizenship by filing a Declaration of Allegiance to this effect. These Declarations of Allegiance are often accompanied by copies of the individual’s birth certificate.

The Judiciary Act of September 24, 1789, made provision for U.S. attorneys and marshals who are appointed by the President and have functioned under the general supervision of the Department of Justice since its creation in 1870. There are 93 U.S. Attorneys stationed throughout the United States, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and the Northern Mariana Islands. One U.S. Attorney is assigned to each of the 94 judicial districts, with the exception of Guam and the Northern Mariana Islands where a single U.S. Attorney serves in both districts. The first U.S. Attorney for the District of Puerto Rico was Noah B.K. Pettingill, who was commissioned on June 5, 1900.

United States Attorneys serve as the nation's principal litigators under the direction of the Attorney General. They investigate violations of Federal criminal laws, present evidence to grand juries, prosecute Federal criminal cases, and serve as the Federal Government's attorney in civil litigation in which the United States is involved or has an interest.

The records maintained by the National Archives at New York City consist of the reading files of U.S. Attorney Daniel Lopez-Romo, who was appointed to this position in 1982. The material consists of correspondence, memoranda, some newspaper clippings, as well as notices of policy changes. Arranged chronologically.

(41.163 cubic feet)

The Corps of Engineers, U.S. Army, with headquarters at Washington, DC, was a result of orders of April 3, 1818. The military responsibilities of the Office of the Chief of Engineers (OCE) have included producing and distributing Army maps, building roads, planning camps, and constructing and repairing fortifications and other installations. Its civil duties have included maintaining and improving inland waterways and harbors, formulating and executing plans for flood control, operating dams and locks, and approving plans for the construction of bridges, wharves, piers, and other works over navigable waters. Expansion of the OCE's river and harbor improvement work after the Civil War necessitated the establishment of district offices throughout the United States. The engineer officer in charge of each district reported directly to the Chief of Engineers until 1888 when engineer divisions were created with administrative jurisdiction over the district offices.

It is unclear when Puerto Rico was first established as an Engineer District. By 1907, the headquarters for this district was located in Tompkinsville, NY and in September 1910 it was moved to New York City. This district includes all harbors, fortifications, and waterways in Puerto Rico.

The records of the Puerto Rico Engineers Office document civilian and military activities of the OCE including administration, coastal defense projects, construction of facilities on military bases, flood control, as well as maintenance and improvement of inland waterways and harbors. They provide geological, hydrological, and economic data about construction projects and their impact on the surrounding area. Included are correspondence, data and permit files, notebooks, reports, and studies. Construction project files contain correspondence, design memorandums, notes, plans, progress reports, specifications, and test results. Nontextual records include engineering drawings, blueprints, maps, and a significant collection of photographs.

The extensive photographic materials include such locations as the harbors at Aguadilla, Aguirre, Arecibo, Guayanilla, Mayaguez, Ponce, Puerto Real (Cabo Rojo), and San Juan, as well as Miraflores Bay and Vieques Island. Inland projects for which photos exist include the following rivers: Bayamón, Bucaná, Chico, Coamo, Estero, Guamani, Jacaguas, Lapa, Las Minas, Maunabo, La Plata, Portugués, Susua (Rio Loco) and Yaguez. Other locations which are documented include: Boca de Congrejos, Ponce and Arecibo air bases, Quebrada Arena, Cabras Island Causeway, Punta las Marias, San Antonio Channel, Condado Bay, San Augustin Bastion, Fort San Cristobal, Guayabol Reservoir, Cabras Island, Pt. Borinquen Air Base, and municipal road projects. This photograph collection also includes images from the U.S. Virgin Islands. A database exists which provides item level access to these photos.

Civil Works Project Construction and Maintenance Files consist of reports and engineer field survey books, memorandums, blueprints, records of proceedings, design data, correspondence, agreements, estimates, drawings, and photographs pertaining to projects in the Puerto Rico district. The projects include improvements to the Harbor at St. Thomas and Christiansted Harbor, St. Croix in the Virgin Islands and San Juan Harbor and Ponce Harbor in Puerto Rico. These records relate to engineering, logistical, and financial matters. Projects include dredging, flood control, erosion projects, swamp reclamation, dry dock operations, removal of wrecks, and a survey of historical fortifications, including the Bastion de Santo Domingo. Files are arranged by project.

Engineering Special Studies and Reports relating to Rivers, Harbors, and Building Facilities consist of reports, memorandums, plans, design data, correspondence, radiograms and telegrams, surveys, agreements, estimates, and contracts pertaining to projects in the Puerto Rico district. Financial documentation includes payment schedules, abstracts of bids, and cost breakdowns. Material also includes completion reports for construction contracts, real estate acquisitions and purchases, progress reports, reports of operations, personnel statements, citations to appear in court, requests for information, and statistics. Graphic materials include blueprints, plans, drawings, charts, photographs, maps, and sketches. The projects include improvements to Aquadilla, Antigua, Culebra Island, Fajardo, Guayana, Guayanes Harbor, Guayanilla Harbor, El Abanico, Isla Grande, Gulfport, Jobos Harbor, La Puntilla, Little Krum Bay Area, Island, Playa de Humacao, Port of Jobos, Pueblo Viejo Bay, San Antonio Channel, San Juan Harbor, St. Thomas, and Yabucoa Harbor. Projects include dredging the removal of wrecks, construction of the engineering department depot, operation of the tug Flagler, repairs and maintenance, personnel, and a proposed boat canal. Arranged largely by project and function.

General Administrative Correspondence Files relating to Military Construction Projects consist of reports, memorandums, guidelines, correspondence, disposition instructions, plans, surveys, leases, photographs, contracts, and ledgers pertaining to operations in the Antilles Area Office. Matters addressed include appropriations and expenditures, auditing, estimates, claims, supplies, and accidents. The files also relate to construction, installations, programs and projects including flood control, additions, conversions, maintenance and repairs. Additionally there are real estate records consisting of leases and sales contracts related to San Juan Hospital, coconut crops, the sale of crops, sale of surplus buildings, and housing. A portion of the real estate records relate particularly to Monos Islands and Manzanilla in Trinidad. The records were the property of Mail and Records of the U.S. Engineer Office, Puerto Rico District and were created by the Antilles Area Office and the Antilles District Real Estate Sub-Office. Arranged by decimal classification system and chronologically within that scheme.

(2.014 cubic feet)

The Ordnance Department was established as an independent bureau of the Department of War by an act of May 14, 1812 and was ultimately abolished and its functions transferred to the U.S. Army Material Command during a 1962 Department of the Army reorganization. The functions of the Ordnance Department were the procurement and distribution to the Army of ordnance and equipment, and the development and testing of new types of ordnance.

The records held in New York related to Puerto Rico concern the ordnance depots in Ponce and San Juan.

Ponce Ordnance Depot records consist of two series:

Letters and Endorsements Sent, 1898-1899, consist of one volume arranged chronologically.

Register of Letters, Endorsements, Cablegrams, and Telegrams Received, 1898-1899, consists of one volume arranged chronologically by date of receipt. The entries are numbered consecutively and are indexed by name to December 1898.

These two volumes from the Ponce Depot also include records related to the depot at Santiago, Cuba.

San Juan Ordnance Depot records consist of four series:

Letters, Telegrams, and Endorsements Sent, 1899-1904, consist of three volumes arranged chronologically. Name and subject index are in the first two volumes.

Register of Ordnance Stores Received from the Army, 1899-1904, consists of one volume arranged chronologically and contains a name index.

Name and Subject Index to Synopses of Letters, Endorsements, and Telegrams Received, 1898-1900, consists of one volume.

Synopses of Letters, Endorsements, and Telegrams Received, 1898-1900, consist of two volumes arranged chronologically by date of receipt. The entries are numbered consecutively and are indexed by name and subject in a separate volume (see above).

RG 181 Naval Districts and Shore Establishments, 1898-1912 & 1940-1957

(134.299 cubic feet)

The San Juan Naval Station was established shortly after the American occupation in 1898 and thereafter quickly expanded its footprint in San Juan through the acquisition of land. On December 10, 1902, the Navy established the Caribbean Division of the North Atlantic Fleet based in San Juan. The U.S. Naval presence in San Juan ceased by December 1973.

Land for the Culebra Naval Station was turned over to the Navy around December 17, 1901. As early as 1902, the first large-scale naval exercises were conducted in Culebra, consisting of a U.S Marine Corps exercise for “defense of a forward base.” In 1902-1903, the first amphibious landing and ground maneuver training exercises were conducted in Puerto Rico by the U.S. Navy. Areas on Culebra were used as firing ranges and for Marine Corps exercises. The Navy set up a permanent base (Lower Camp) in the area of San Ildefonso, and local residents were relocated to other areas of the island. In conjunction with annual naval fleet maneuvers, a battalion of U.S. Marines held advance base defense exercises on the island. By 1904, Culebra had been designated as a naval station, with the construction of numerous facilities related to this use.

Although the Navy established yards and other shore installations to support the fleet as early as 1789, a formal system of Naval Districts was not formally established until May 7, 1903. The original 13 Naval Districts were modeled on the existing lighthouse district system at that time. From 1915 to 1920, prompted largely by World War I, Naval Districts transformed into complex organizations, with full-time staff, new operational functions, and new command relationships. General Order 632, dated February 28, 1918, defined the authority of the commandant over all naval activities in the field including military, industrial, supply, and transportation. In general the officer in charge of each district was usually called “Commandant” and was responsible for defending the coast and exercised military and administrative control over yards, stations, air installations, and training facilities. During World War II, Naval Districts took on the job of managing the construction, repair, and refitting of naval ships and assumed the responsibility for arming merchant ships. Naval Districts were also responsible for building and operating the bases required to train millions of sailors and aviators.

In 1916, the district system was extended to include Puerto Rico and Hawaii. Initially, Puerto Rico was placed in the Third District, headquartered in New York as that city afforded better communication than the proposed alternative of the Sixth District, headquartered in Charleston, SC. However, by 1919, Puerto Rico was removed from Third District jurisdiction and placed under the direct control of the Chief of Naval Operations. In this regard, researchers may wish to consult relevant records from both the Third Naval District and the Chief of Naval Operations. The Tenth Naval District, encompassing Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Cuba, and the rest of the Caribbean outside the Panama Canal Zone, was established on January 1, 1940. Admiral Raymond Spruance served as its first Commandant. Mutual defense interests among Latin American countries, the United States, and its European allies, led to the expansion of the Tenth District in 1942 to encompass Venezuela, Suriname, Trinidad, and British and French Guyana. By September 30, 1980, the Tenth Naval District was disestablished.

An alpha-numeric filing system was established by the Navy in 1923 which was used to arrange some materials in this record group after that date.

The records from the Culebra Naval Station and San Juan Naval Station consist mostly of correspondence detailing administrative operations of the respective installations. Topics covered include property issues including ownership disputes, sale and lease agreements, supplies and requisitions, financial accounts, personnel and disciplinary matters including court martial documents, construction and maintenance, communications and wireless telegraphy, and operations and maneuvers of specific vessels. Correspondence to and from specific ships often document developments in other Caribbean countries where the vessels operated, such as the Dominican Republic. The material also details interaction with other Federal agencies such as Insular Affairs, Department of Justice, Life Saving Stations, Lighthouse Service, Customs Service, and the U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, as well as relations with local Puerto Rican authorities. Culebra records also include material on target range leases, as well as the U.S. Marine Corps presence on the island. Records from San Juan also include material on the Naval Hospital located there, ordinance documents, inspection of supplies, expenditure reports, and Culebra property issues. Maps and blueprints related to the installations are interfiled with the correspondence.

The records of the Tenth Naval District consist mostly of general correspondence and administrative files related to operations throughout the Caribbean, including Guantanamo, Cuba, and Trinidad. General correspondence, directives and administrative files, detail administrative operations of the District, including personnel issues, maintenance and construction, property issues and housing, quartermaster requisitions and supplies, communications, financial matters, statistics, Provost Marshall investigations and disciplinary matters. These materials include maps, blueprints, schematics, and plans. The bulk of the correspondence and administrative files chronicle the tenure of Admiral Daniel Gallery as Commandant. Classified correspondence includes intelligence related material such as foreign political and military developments, movement of vessels, suspected espionage, war preparations and warfare operations, orders, communications, censorship issues, staffing matters, ship and aircraft operations, aviation logistics, status of shore stations, and blackout conditions. These materials also include some reconnaissance photos, maps, blueprints and schematics. Instructions and Notices files consist of administrative issuances, policies, and procedures. Censorship files includes an organization book and staffing information of the District telecommunication censor office, as well as directives, memoranda, correspondence, and a historical report entitled A Report on the Office of Censorship.

RG 338 U.S. Army Commands, 1952-1962

(2.336 cubic feet)

The present system of U.S. Army Commands, which are organized both functionally and geographically, emerged from a War Department reorganization of February 28, 1942.

Fort Buchanan General Depot, 1953

Fort Buchanan was named after Brigadier General James A. Buchanan, the first commander of the Puerto Rico Regiment, established on July 1, 1899. The Puerto Rico Regiment was officially designated as the 65th Infantry Regiment in 1920, after defending the Panama Canal Zone during World War I. A tract of 300 acres on the south shore of San Juan Bay was acquired to provide the regiment with a training area. The site was established in 1923 as Camp Buchanan.

In May 1940 the location was designated as Fort Buchanan and expanded initially to 1,514 and later to 4,500 acres. During World War II, Fort Buchanan became a general depot and induction center/training area for the Antilles command. After the war, the post was gradually reduced to 746 acres.

Fort Buchanan remained a command depot with post facilities, a personnel center, and a special training center until closure as an Army post in 1966. On December 31, 1966, with the deactivation of the Antilles Command, Fort Buchanan came under the U.S. Navy control, but returned to Army control in December 1971. Fort Buchanan currently is the only active U.S. Army installation in Puerto Rico located in the metropolitan area of San Juan. It serves under direct control of the Installation Management Command, Southeast Region (IMCOM-SE).

The records document quartermaster activities at the depot and include installation histories, manuals, orders, planning files, and reports. General Orders document change in command, lists of personnel receiving awards, and notices of retirements. General Regulations detail administrative guidance and functioning for the installation. Military Historian Files provide a daily journal and weekly summary of the principal activities at post.

Rodriguez U.S. Army Clinic, Fort Buchanan, 1952-1962

On August 31, 1944, the War Department issued General Order No. 71 which renamed the Army General Hospital of Fort Brooke located in the former Ballajá Barracks (in the grounds of the Fort San Felipe del Morro) in Old San Juan, the Rodriguez (161st) General Hospital, in honor of Major Rodriguez Vargas. Most of the historic areas of El Morro were transferred to the National Park Service in 1949. On February 14, 1949 the Rodriguez General Hospital was closed as a part of the closing of Fort Brooke. The Outpatient Clinic which was located on Fort Buchanan was renamed the Rodriguez Army Health Clinic and remains in part to this day.

The records relate to medical services at the installation and include correspondence, manuals, orders, planning files, and reports. General Orders document change in command, lists of personnel receiving awards, as well as organizational and functional changes. There is also an Annual Report on medical service activities. Operating Procedure Files documents administrative rules and regulations, facility management, supply and maintenance. There is a series of Newspapers which consist of issues of “La Griota” the Hospital’s news sheet for personnel of Fort Brooke. News items cover military, international and political events, sports, as well as local post information. Galleys used in producing each sheet are also included. Organizational and Functional Manuals document the administrative structure and functioning of the hospital, including organization charts.

RG 4 U.S. Food Administration, 1917-1919

(8.955 cubic feet)

The United States Food Administration was established by Executive Order 2679-A, August 10, 1917, pursuant to the Food and Fuel Control Act [40 Stat. 276], approved on the same date and replacing an organization established on May 4, 1917 by then Secretary of Agriculture Herbert Hoover.

State and local food administrators were delegated the responsibility of carrying out policy measures formulated in Washington, DC in such a way as to meet local conditions. The Puerto Rico Food Administration was created in October 1917, and Albert E. Lee was appointed Federal Food Administrator. The central office was located in San Juan and town officials throughout the island cooperated with it.

The functions of the Food Administration were to assure the supply, distribution, and conservation of food during World War I. The office also facilitated the movement of foodstuff and prevented monopolies and hoarding. The agency helped maintain government control over food mainly by means of voluntary agreements and a licensing system and carried out widespread dissemination of information, appealed to the patriotism of the local population and engaged in community organization. In so doing, the local food administration penetrated into almost every part of the country and reached almost every inhabitant.

The main activities of the local administration ceased after the signing of the Armistice in November 1918. The Food Administration was abolished by Executive Order 33200, August 21, 1920, which terminated all branches of the Food Administration not previously abolished and transferred its records to the U.S. Grain Corporation.

The records maintained by the National Archives in New York include records of the Office of the Federal Food Administrator as well as the Division of Licenses and Enforcement. Records of the Office of the Federal Food Administrator consist of three series: general correspondence, correspondence pertaining to special licenses, and correspondence with local committees. RG 9 National Recovery Administration, 1933-1936

(81.864 cubic feet)

The National Recovery Administration (NRA) was the first of several agencies established under authority of the National Industrial Recovery Act [48 Stat. 195], approved June 16, 1933. The function of the NRA was to carry out the main provisions of Title I of the Recovery Act and its program had four main objectives: 1) to spread work by reducing the number of hours, 2) to increase consumer purchasing power by increasing total wage distribution, 3) to stop trade practices similar to those already recognized as legally unfair and to limit competition without raising prices so drastically as to neutralize the increase in total wages, and 4) to eliminate child labor.

The NRA planned for the adoption of a series of codes of fair competition for separate regulation of every important branch of trade or industry. Such codes, once approved, would become binding under the law upon all members of the trade or industry to which they applied.

On October 19, 1933, a plan for the administration of the Recovery Act in the territories of Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and Alaska was approved by the Administrator. This plan provided for a Deputy Administrator for each territory to represent the NRA on the territorial recovery board. Each board, composed of the Deputy Administrator and a representative each from the Interior and Labor Departments, would consider codes for industries specific to the territory and amendments to codes that applied to the United States as a whole. In practice the boards acted only in an advisory capacity. In November 1933, Boaz Long was appointed Deputy Administrator for Puerto Rico. The Deputy Administrator had a staff of legal advisors and a few clerks and stenographers. On December 29, 1933, a Territorial Section was established in the Washington office of the NRA to supervise the three territorial offices, and on May 17, 1934, it was incorporated into Division 8 (later the Public Agencies Division).

On May 27, 1935, the U.S. Supreme Court, in the Schechter case, held the mandatory codes section of the Recovery Act unconstitutional, after which the elaborate compliance and enforcement procedures were abolished. After the Schechter decision, field office activities focused on preparing special studies relating to the operation of the NRA, investigating deviations from code standards, surveying business conditions, and persuading industry to comply voluntarily with code standards. In September 1935, the territorial offices were transferred to the Division of Review and the Puerto Rico office ceased operation in March 1936.

General Records consist of records relating to the administrative and operating procedures of the office, code formulation, home work problems, code authority operations, and distribution of NRA insignia. The Bureau also assumed the functions of the Special Agency Services which was the successor to the Division of Special Agents created in 1878.

The Bureau of Customs administered functions pertaining to the importation and exportation of merchandise into and out of the United States, the collection of tonnage taxes, entrance and clearance of vessels, and the regulation of vessels in the coasting and fishing trades.

The collection district of Puerto Rico was established in 1900 with San Juan as the port of entry and Aguadilla, Arecibo, Arrago, Fajardo, Humacao, Mayaguez, and Ponce as ports of delivery. It remained a separate district until 1952 when Puerto Rico became a commonwealth.

The Service also promotes the conservation and use of national forests and grasslands, conducts forest and range research, and cooperates with administrators of state, territorial, and private forests.

The Caribbean National Forest is located in northeastern Puerto Rico on the slopes of the Sierra de Luquillo mountains. Comprising 28,000 acres, it is the only tropical rain forest in the National Forest System. The forest region was initially set aside as a Crown Reserve in 1876 by the King Alfonso XII of Spain, and represents one of the oldest reserves in the Western Hemisphere. It was established as the Luquillo Forest Reserve on January 17, 1903 by the General Land Office and became a National Forest in 1907. It was renamed Caribbean National Forest on June 4, 1935. An Executive Order signed by President George W. Bush on April 2, 2007 changed the name of the Caribbean National Forest to El Yunque National Forest.

The Forest Supervisor's Files consist of correspondence, reports, and other material related to operations of the forest, including maintenance and improvements, trespass issues, wildlife, research programs, land surveys, and organizational and administrative matters. Material also relates to Latin American forest resources and the Parcelero Program where inhabitants of land incorporated into the national forest were allowed to remain in place. The bulk of the material concerns land acquisition files for the Luquillo and Toro Negro Units. Land acquisitions files include correspondence, deeds and title transfer documents, land value estimates, blueprints, drawings and other related material.

RG 155 Wage and Hour Division, 1939-1945

(5.210 cubic feet)

The Wage and Hour Division was established in the Department of Labor by the Fair Labor Standards Act of June 25, 1938 [52 Stat. 1061], which fixed a minimum wage rate and a maximum work week for employees engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or in the production of goods for such commerce.

The Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division was empowered to appoint industry committees comprised equally of representatives of employers, employees, and the public. Upon the recommendation of these committees the Administrator could issue wage orders setting a higher minimum wage than the statutory rate. An amendment, effective January 25, 1950, raised the minimum wage but limited the tripartite industry committee procedure to Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands, where it was used for establishing wage rates below the normal minimum.

The Public Contracts Division was established in the Department of Labor to administer the Walsh-Healy Public Contracts Act of June 30, 1936 [49 Stat. 2036], requiring Government supply contracts in excess of $10,000 to contain certain stipulations regarding maximum hours, minimum wages, child labor, convict labor, safety, and health.

On October 15, 1942, the Wage and Hour Division and the Public Contracts Division were consolidated by order of the Secretary of Labor and operated as a single unit.

Selected inspection case files of the Contracts Division for Puerto Rico comprise about 3 cubic feet of records. A typical case file contains correspondence exchanged with the enterprise inspected, summaries of wage reports, employee wage and hour records, computation sheets for wages due, and other related material. The files are arranged by geographic area and thereunder alphabetically by company name. There is also a series of inspection case files from Region II, which includes materials from Puerto Rico in boxes 259, 306-307, and 587-588.

Records of the Puerto Rico Industry Committee comprise just over 2 cubic feet and consist of special investigation case files. This committee was established by the Administrator on August 1, 1940 to carry out the provisions of Section 5e of the Fair Labor Standards Act authorizing special investigations of industrial conditions in Puerto Rico. A typical file consists of the notice of appointment of committee members, a description of the industry to be investigated, transcripts of hearings before the committee, briefs and exhibits from the employer and employee groups, recommendations concerning minimum wages and maximum hours, and official orders governing the industry issued by the Administrator. If the recommendations were appealed, the file may include a transcript of the rehearing and any new wage and hour order. Each industry committee was assigned a number when it was established, and its file was given the same number. The files are arranged in numerical order. The industry headings for Puerto Rico include:

- 1) Cigarette, cigar, bay oil, bay rum, and aromatic alcohol
- 2) fabric and leather gloves

- 3) Handiwork Division of the needlework industries and leaf tobacco

Muy Señores míos:

Tenemos en esta población un pequeño gallinero y hace tres días que observamos al gallo (padrón) que estaba bien triste. Al cejerle notamos que tenía una fuerte irritación en la vista, con supuración pestilente. Le hemos lavado con agua bórico, lo mismo que con agua con sal, y también le hemos puesto azúcar candy sin que hasta la fecha hayamos notado alguna mejoría en él. Ruego a ustedes que pueden hacerle, se sirvan darme idea, de como yo puede salir victorioso en la curación del mismo.

Con gracias anticipadas, quede atte. S.S.

Agricultural Experiment Station at Mayaguez
(71.760 cubic feet)

The Office of Experiment Stations was established in the Department of Agriculture on October 1, 1888 to represent the Commissioner (now Secretary) of Agriculture in his relations with the agricultural experiment stations created under the Hatch Act of March 2, 1887 [27 Stat. 440]. The act provided for the establishment of agriculture experiment stations under the direction of each land-grant college in the states and territories.

Experiment stations served as centers to conduct scientific research to solve problems and suggest improvements in the food and agriculture industry. Experiment station scientists worked with farmers, ranchers, suppliers, processors, and others involved in food production and agriculture.

Experiment station work began in Puerto Rico in 1901, with a permanent headquarters established at Mayaguez in September 1902. The objective of the station was to conduct assessments of the agricultural resources and capabilities of Puerto Rico, especially regarding food production, development of animal industries, dairy farming, and horticulture. In addition to scientific experiments, the station was involved in the distribution of seeds, plants and publications. Experiment station work under the Hatch Act was started at Rio Piedras in 1934. The experiment station, now known as the Tropical Agriculture Research Station, is currently part of the College of Agricultural Sciences at the University of Puerto Rico at Mayaguez.

The material held by the National Archives at New York consists of correspondence and other records related to the operation of the experiment station. Files are arranged chronologically, but there is little further arrangement. Material is in both English and Spanish.

Material covers a broad range of efforts to improve local agriculture detailing experiments involving introduction of improved plant varieties, breeds of animals, methods of agriculture, and farm implements and machinery. A substantial amount of material exists on the administrative, staffing and financial operations of the experiment station. Correspondence also includes reports by farmers regarding observations and progress in planting, as well as with farm equipment manufacturers. Documentation covers such topics as entomology issues including bees and insects such as beetles, crickets, fruit flies, and assorted pests, horticulture matters including seeds and plant pathology, and animal husbandry. Specific crops detailed in the records include the coffee and sugarcane industries, as well as assorted foods such as soybeans and corn.

RG 187 National Resource Planning Board, 1941-1943
Region 11 (Caribbean)
(3.42 cubic feet)

The National Resources Planning Board (NRPB) came into existence under the President's Reorganization Plan No. 1, effective July 1, 1939, as the successor organization to the National Resources Committee, to study the physical, human, and technological resources of the nation. It engaged in four major lines of activity: 1) planning and programming public works; 2) stimulating local, state, and regional planning; 3) coordinating Federal planning with respect to the conservation and use of national resources; 4) conducting a research program of long-range studies as requested by Congress or directed by the President. The NRPB also addressed special problems relating to World War II. The NRPB was abolished by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1944 [57 Stat. 170], effective August 31, 1943, which provided that its functions could not be transferred to another agency. It was given until January 1, 1944 to conclude its affairs.

Region 11 consisted of Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. Basic planning began when the NRPB made available to the Government of Puerto Rico a consultant to help draft a planning bill. The two principle steps in the implementation of overall planning in the area were the organization of the regional office in San Juan around December 15, 1941 and the establishment of the Puerto Rico Planning, Urbanizing and Zoning Board in August 1942. The only regional director was Frederick P. Bartlett, who was appointed "Manager, Region 11" effective December 13, 1941, and separated effective December 31, 1943. The social and economic conditions unique to Puerto Rico created a need for a comprehensive and integrated control of resources, especially regarding the problems of a growing population, inadequate income production, and unsatisfactory income distribution. The industries and trade of Puerto Rico had long been based on export cash crops and their processing, most importantly raw and refined sugar, rum, industrial alcohol, and molasses. However, the island still had to import from the United States two-thirds of its food and most of its other necessities and luxuries. A great need existed to increase the use of water power to produce electricity, improvement of sanitation, including adequate water supply, better sewage facilities and water treatment to prevent disease; improvement and expansion of health, medical, and housing facilities; better educational system, community development, and public administration.

The Puerto Rico Planning, Urbanizing and Zoning Board was one of the few planning agencies that also had the power to put its plans into effect, and was particularly effective in the area of local planning. Several other planning bodies were also established, including a Water Committee, an Agricultural Planning Committee, and an Industrial Development Company. In the field of more direct physical planning were the Puerto Rico Water Resources Authority, the Insular Sewerage Service, and the Puerto Rico Transportation Authority.

The holdings in New York related to Puerto Rico consist of two series: General and Technical Correspondence and Administrative Correspondence.

The General and Technical Correspondence relates to planning in Puerto Rico represents the central files of the regional office and documents various fields of planning, projects, investigations, and studies. This includes correspondence with the NRPB and other Federal agencies, with British Caribbean authorities concerning joint planning, with other regional offices and the Government of Puerto Rico, as well as with public and private organizations and individuals. The series also includes reference materials, working papers of reports, minutes of meetings, and statistical and graphic matter. Arranged according to a classification scheme alphabetically by major subject heading and thereunder by subheadings.

The Administrative Correspondence represents a fragment of a larger file, most of which consisted of routine housekeeping records produced by the San Juan office. This series contains correspondence of and concerning Alfred Bettman, who was assigned by the NRPB to aid in drafting a Puerto Rico planning bill, as well as material under the following headings: consultants-general, maps, memoranda, press releases, work programs, and work status. Arranged alphabetically under these subject and thereunder chronologically.

The Office of Price Administration (OPA) was given statutory recognition as an independent agency by the Emergency Price Control Act of January 30, 1942. In order to stabilize prices and rents, the OPA established maximum prices for commodities (except agricultural commodities controlled by the Secretary of Agriculture) and maximum rents in defense areas. The OPA also rationed scarce essential commodities and authorized subsidies of some of those commodities. Most of the price and rationing controls were lifted between August 1945 and November 1946.

Region IX was established by Administrative Order No. 4, issued May 7, 1942. It was headquartered in Washington, DC and its jurisdiction encompassed Alaska, Hawaii, the Panama Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and other possessions. The records in the National Archives at New York City comprise the records of the Region IX regional office that relate to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and materials maintained by OPA offices in each of these territories. The records also include a folder that contains a few reports of the Regional Price Division concerning activities relating to Alaska and Hawaii, as well as Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

The Puerto Rican Reconstruction Administration (PRRA) was established within the Department of the Interior by Executive Order 7057 of May 28, 1935, in accordance with the Emergency Relief Appropriations Act of 1935 [49 Stat. 115].

The PRRA was set up to provide relief and increase employment, with an emphasis on the rehabilitation of Puerto Rico's agricultural economy. It engaged in such activities as urban and rural housing, demonstration farming, work relief, construction of hydroelectric plants, loans to farmers, and formation of cooperatives.

The PRRA was initially organized with the following divisions: Rural Rehabilitation, Rural Electrification, Forestry, University Buildings, Slum Clearance, Work Relief, Health, Planning, Census, Legal, Finance, Business Administration, and Personnel. The designations and functions of some of these divisions changed as the PRRA developed its program.

By 1948, the PRRA had accomplished its basic program. During the final period of its existence, the PRRA was concerned primarily with loans to cooperatives and with the operations of urban and rural housing projects. Records of the Legal Division – Card Register of Parcels Sold with Houses is a card register of lands with houses sold to the PRRA, and corresponds to the series of land acquisition case files and registered deeds for rural rehabilitation projects described above. The Spanish word "Agricultor" typically refers to a farmer, but on the cards it is suspected that it refers to the owner of a farm or cooperative of farms which was then subdivided among other farmers, herein labeled "Granjeros," another Spanish word for farmer, though "Granjeros" here may also refer to a Homesteader. Arranged alphabetically by pueblo [town] in the boxes, and then each pueblo is arranged as noted. The Código No. on the top right corner of each card corresponds to the series of Registered Deeds and Related Records Concerning the Disposition of Lands Acquired by the Rural Rehabilitation Division. Arranged numerically, seemingly by a number in the upper left corner, however it is not clear to what, if anything, the number refers. Contents are arranged by project, however the project order refers to the number on the cards, and are not alphabetical. It also seems that areas have been divided into districts, but there is no key to the districts attached to this box.

RG 26 U.S. Coast Guard (1901-2000)

The U.S. Coast Guard was established in the Department of the Treasury by an act of January 28, 1915, which consolidated that department's Revenue Cutter and Lifesaving Services. The Coast Guard took over the administration of lighthouses in 1939, and in 1942 assumed functions of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation (RG 41) relating to navigation and inspection laws and to merchant seamen. On April 1, 1967, the Coast Guard became a part of the Department of Transportation and assumed responsibility for functions transferred to it from the Bureau of Customs (RG 36) pertaining to the admeasurement and documentation of U.S. vessels.

The Customs Service, created by an act of July 31, 1789, became part of the Department of the Treasury when that department was established in September 1789. The Service has been responsible for the enforcement of numerous laws and regulations pertaining to the import and export of merchandise, collection of tonnage taxes, control of the entrance and clearances of vessels and aircraft, regulation of vessels involved in the coastwise and fishing trades, the protection of passengers. A Bureau of Customs was established on March 3, 1927, to supervise these activities, and in 1942, it assumed the responsibilities of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation (RG 41) relating to the registering, enrolling, licensing, and admeasurement of merchant vessels. This responsibility was assigned to the Coast Guard in 1967 (see RG 26).

Navigation laws were passed by the first Congress in 1789 and were enforced by customs officers under the supervision of the Department of the Treasury. In 1884, a Bureau of Navigation under the control of the Commissioner of Navigation was established within the Department of the Treasury to administer the navigation laws. In 1903, it was transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor along with the Steamboat Inspection Service, which had been established in the Department of the Treasury in 1852 to formulate rules and regulations for steamboat inspections. The two bureaus were merged in 1932 to form the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, which was renamed the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation (BMIN) in 1936. In 1942, its functions relating to merchant vessel documentation were transferred to the Bureau of Customs (RG 36), while those pertaining to merchant vessel inspection, safety of life at sea, and merchant vessel personnel were transferred to the U.S. Coast Guard (RG 26). The Bureau was abolished in 1946.

The various series of records from Puerto Rico held in New York City pertain to ownership and licenses of vessels, including bills of sale, mortgages, and master's oaths.

Oil and Hazardous Substance Discharge Records consist of 53 boxes of material concerning the grounding of the T/B Morris J. Berman and the resulting oil spill in January 1994. On January 7, 1994, the disabled tank barge Morris J. Berman ran aground a few hundred yards offshore of San Juan. The resulting 750,000-gallon (26,000 barrels) oil spill polluted several miles of prime beachfront during the height of the winter tourism season, as well as impacting historic properties and endangering natural resources. Material includes correspondence, incident action plans, submerged oil recovery daily reports, contractor expenses and general financial records, pollution removal funding, as well as Puerto Rico Federal Affairs Administration (PRFA) and Puerto Rico Civil Defense documentation. RG 59 General Records of the Department of State, Dispatches from U.S. Consular Representatives in Puerto Rico, 1821-1899.

This microfilm publication (M76) reproduces thirty volumes of correspondence addressed to the Department of State by consular representatives in Puerto Rico. These materials are arranged chronologically in the following series:

Registers, 1828-1870

Communications from San Juan, 1821-1899

Communications from Guayama, 1828-1850

Communications from Ponce, 1877-1866 and 1877-1885

Communications from Mayaguez, 1828-1850 and 1880-1892

No communications were received from Guayama after 1850, from Ponce between 1866 and 1877 or after 1885, or from Mayaguez between 1850 and 1880 or after 1892. During these periods the ports in question were consular agencies, subordinate to the consulate in San Juan. After Puerto Rico was ceded to the United States in 1898 there was no further reason to maintain consulates on the island, and the San Juan consulate closed on June 30, 1899.

In addition to the ports mentioned above, other ports in Puerto Rico were served at various times by U.S. consular agents, including Aguadilla, Arecibo, Fajardo, Humacao, Naguabo, and Vieques. Reports from these ports were submitted to one of the other four consulates in Puerto Rico.

The dispatches cover such topics as consular fees collected, arrivals and departures of U.S. vessels, imports from and exports to the U.S., aid rendered to American seamen, names of American citizens resident on the island, and other data collected in the course of consular activity. Some material also relates to legal difficulties of American citizens in Puerto Rico including settlement of estates and suits for damages, as well as relations between U.S. consular officials and the Spanish authorities.

RG 85 Immigration and Naturalization Service, Passenger Lists of Airplanes Arriving at San Juan, Puerto Rico, 1929-1941

On August 3, 1882, Congress passed the first Federal law regulating immigration [22 Stat. 214–215]; the Secretary of the Treasury had general supervision over it between 1882 and 1891. The Office of Superintendent of Immigration in the Department of the Treasury was established under an act of March 3, 1891 [26 Stat. 1085], and was later designated a bureau in 1895 with responsibility for administering the alien contract-labor laws. By the turn of the century, it began to designate its own immigration districts, the numbers and boundaries of which changed over the years. In 1903 the Bureau became part of the Department of Commerce and Labor; its name was changed to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization when functions relating to naturalization were added in 1906. In 1933 the functions were transferred to the Department of Labor and became the responsibility of the newly formed Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). Under President Roosevelt's Reorganization Plan V of 1940, the INS was moved to the Department of Justice. The INS was abolished, and its immigration and naturalization recordkeeping functions were transferred to the new Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services within the new Department of Homeland Security, established January 24, 2003, by the Homeland Security Act of 2002 [116 Stat. 2135, 2205].

The passenger lists in this microfilm publication (A3438) were submitted to the INS at San Juan by the "airman in charge" of each airplane that had last departed from a U.S. or foreign airport. The records were filmed in two series and then in chronological order. Inbound Passengers, December 1, 1929–June 20, 1937, consists of passengers whose final destination as San Juan, Puerto Rico, while Inbound Passengers in Transit, December 15, 1929–December 31, 1941, consists of passengers stopping in San Juan temporarily enroute to their final destinations.

The passengers were recorded on INS Form 633, Master List, which identifies the airports of departure and arrival, date of arrival, aircraft nationality and number, and the following information about each passenger: name, age, gender, nationality, and destination. Immigration officials annotated the form by crossing out any passengers not actually on the plane as well as noting the number of citizens and/or aliens admitted. The reverse side of the form, which was also filmed, consists of instructions for filling out the form as well as an affidavit by the "airman in charge" that the information given about each passenger was "correct and true." Arranged chronologically within each series.

The records were filmed by the INS in 1956 and transferred to the National Archives on microfilm. Although some of this film may be difficult to read, it is impossible to correct the situation since the INS destroyed the original records.

RG 146 U.S. Civil Service Commission, 1972-1981

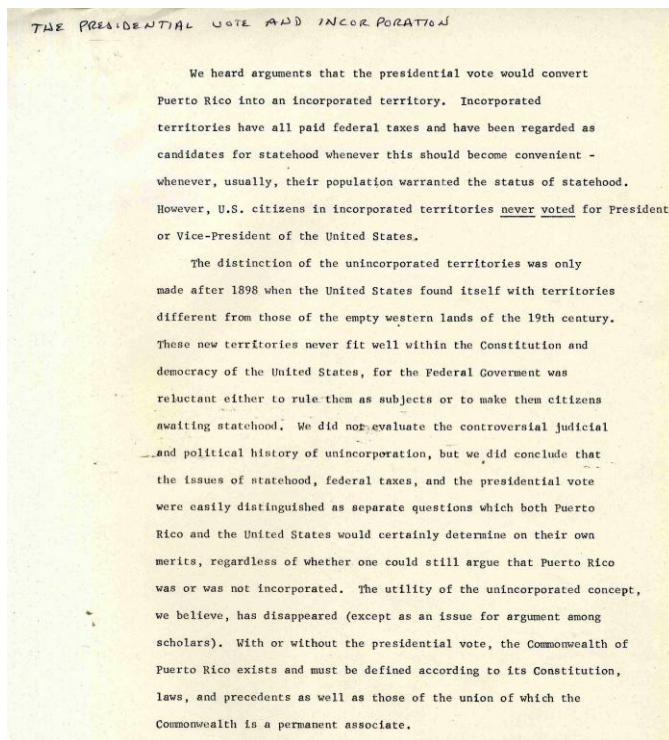

(2.660 cubic feet)

The United States Civil Service Commission (USCSC) was created by an act of Congress of January 16, 1883 [22 Stat. 403]. The USCSC administered the federal civil service system, including employee appeals of adverse agency personnel actions. The Commission also provided examinations to applicants for competitive service and established standards for qualifications, promotion, transfers and reinstatement of Federal employees in Federal agencies throughout the country.

The New York regional office of the United States Civil Service Commission was originally established in 1905 as District 2, and its jurisdiction eventually included New York, New Jersey, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

With the passage of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, many of its functions were taken over by the Office of Personnel Management on January 1, 1979.

The records of the Qualitative Reviews of State and Local Merit Systems document reviews of state and territorial government agencies to ensure compliance with Civil Service Commission regulations. Materials include correspondence, Comprehensive Employment and Training Administration (CETA) reviews, reports, and evaluations of agencies in New Jersey, New York, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands who were the recipient of Federal grants to verify their personnel management and operating procedures complied with Federal regulations. Records related to Puerto Rico are located in Boxes 3-5.

RG 186 Records of the Spanish Governors of Puerto Rico, Records concerning Foreigners in Puerto Rico (Extranjeros), ca. 1815-1845

By the Treaty of Paris, Spain ceded Puerto Rico to the United States, which included rights to the official archives and records of the island, which the United State agreed to preserve and make available for use. The fragmentary correspondence and related records of the Spanish colonial governors of Puerto Rico were transferred to the National Archives in 1943. A Congressional resolution in 1957 authorized the return of the Puerto Rican archives to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

These records are a microfilm publication (T1170) consisting of requests by foreigners for permission to reside in Puerto Rico (carta de domicilio), correspondence, lists of foreigners residing in various towns on the island, and occasionally copies of the final naturalization papers (carta de naturalizacion). Most of the material is dated after 1815, when foreign immigration was permitted in Puerto Rico for the first time. Records earlier than 1815 consist mostly of letters from local authorities informing the central government of the arrival of foreigners. The records are in Spanish and arranged by last name. At the beginning of each roll of film there is a list of names included on that roll.

Ad Hoc Advisory Group on the Presidential Vote for Puerto Rico, 1970-1971
(6.9 cubic feet)

The Ad Hoc Advisory Group on the Presidential Vote for Puerto Rico was appointed jointly by President Nixon and Governor Ferré on April 13, 1970. The Advisory Group was established pursuant to the recommendations in 1966 of the United States-Puerto Rico Commission on the Status of Puerto Rico. The Group consisted of fifteen members, seven from Puerto Rico and eight from the United States. The group was established to study the feasibility of extending to citizens in Puerto Rico the right to vote for the President and Vice-President of the United States. To this end the Group sponsored public hearings and contracted for a number of special studies to be used in conjunction with the Group's discussions in order to develop recommendations to be incorporated in the Group's final report. The office of the Group was closed on June 30, 1971.

The records held in New York consist of the Central Files of the Executive Director. These files include transcripts of public hearings, agendas and minutes of meetings of the Group, correspondence, drafts of reports, special studies prepared for the Group, press clippings, and reference material. Arranged alphabetically by subject, name of individual, or type of record.

The material includes information concerning the rules of procedure for advisory group meetings, the times and places of public hearings, the procedure for selection of witnesses and assignment of time periods for their testimony, and the procedures for public hearings. The records further contain information on the Advisory Group's origin, function and operations, and document the procedures by which it accomplished its objectives. These records provide information of a unique nature on a fundamental constitutional issue.

The agency was charged with disposing of surplus consumer, capital, and producer goods, industrial and maritime real property, and airports and aircraft located in the United States and its territories. The agency was abolished by the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act [63 Stat. 738], June 30, 1949.

RG 452 American Revolution Bicentennial Administration, 1974-1976

(1.071 cubic feet)

The American Revolution Bicentennial Administration (ARBA) New York Regional Office (Region II) was one of ten field office established to stimulate and encourage the Bicentennial celebration. Based in New York City and headed by Barbara Wainscott as director, Region II consisted of New York, New Jersey, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

ARBA was established by President Nixon on December 11, 1973 under the authority of Public Law 93-179 [87 Stat 697]. ARBA superseded the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission and was headquartered in Washington, DC. The New York regional office was established to support ARBA's mission, which was to act as a clearinghouse for bicentennial information as well as to coordinate and support events and projects that commemorated the American Revolution Bicentennial . The responsibilities of the regional offices included routing grant applications and requests for official recognition of local programs to the national headquarters and representing ARBA at ceremonial functions.

Records pertaining specifically to Puerto Rico are incorporated throughout the Administrative Records for Region II. There is one file specifically on correspondence with the Puerto Rico Bicentennial Commission, including information on the Leo Lo Lai Festival . The administrative records in general document the activities of the regional office. They primarily concern the coordination of a variety of bicentennial events organized throughout New York, New Jersey, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Files include correspondence, applications for official recognition, agendas, travel vouchers, printed materials and photographs. Correspondence is primarily related to the relocation and set-up of the regional office, meetings, communications with communities and bicentennial commissions, event invitations, corporate involvement, and information requests. Materials documenting proposed and approved bicentennial programs include brochures, information packets, operations strategy proposals, photographs and sheet music. Arranged alphabetically within the following categories: Office Administration, Meetings, Applications, Correspondence, Travel, Non-ARBC Events, Region II Events, and Publications.

While we are open to the public during regular business hours, many of our records are held offsite at records centers and must be ordered in advance. In order to better serve your needs, it is highly encouraged that individuals contact New York staff before coming to conduct research. While we endeavor to respond to all requests as quickly as possible, in order to balance competing demands on staff time and resources, we adhere to a general response time of 10 business days. Also, in order to ensure a fruitful visit, patrons wishing to use textual materials are required to set up an appointment in advance.

In order to use original records, at the time of your visit you will need to obtain a research card by completing a short form giving full name, permanent address, and telephone number. You must also show official identification that includes a photograph. A driver's license, passport, school, or employment identification are among the acceptable forms of identification. Additional information on Research Room guidelines is available on-line: <http://www.archives.gov/research/start/nara-regulations.html>

Researchers should also familiarize themselves with the guidelines for citing unpublished records held by the National Archives and Records Administration.

Selected Related Records Held by the National Archives outside New York City

The following are selected record groups and series held by National Archives facilities outside New York City that contain material related to Puerto Rico. This is not a comprehensive list, but is included to assist further research. Links are to entries in the Online Public Access catalog (OPA), as well as the Guide to Federal Records, and additional records may be located by searching both. It should be noted that entries in the catalog are routinely being added and updated, and, due to varying levels of detail, relevant records may not necessarily be described as related to Puerto Rico. Patrons are encouraged to conduct more targeted searches in OPA based on their specific research topic or interests. Questions regarding any of these records should be sent to the National Archives unit listed in the contact section of the catalog record or to the main NARA inquiry email (Inquire@nara.gov). Researchers should also consider using the collections of the Presidential Libraries, as appropriate, and may wish to consult their online finding aids. A partial list of record series held at Presidential Libraries regarding Puerto Rico, with links to OPA, is included below as well.
